Description

A set of plated Travel Cutlery in Case.

The set consists of a knife and fork, each made in two parts to dismantle for travel, with a leather case. The hollow handles house the blade and fork's tines when packed down to both reduce the length of the cutlery and protect them from being damaged or damaging anything else. The handles are made with fine grooves running their length giving both a grip and decoration.

The cutlery fits into a leather pad which in turn fits into a grained leather case. The case is marked to the interior for the retailer, and possible maker, J.C. Vickery of Regent Street. This design wasn't exclusive to Vickery and its likley that a number of luxury goods sellers in London's West End sold similar sets. We know Andrew Barrett & Sons sold a silver version hall marked for 1903.

The is a good condition set of travel cutlery that was more likely made for domestic use, such as picnics or train travel rather than for campaign. Circa 1900.

Size for the case is given.
