Description

A small leather Kit Bag with a strong handle.

This Bag may have been made as a money or bullion bag. Certainly it is a similar shape and has a leather lining but is a little taller. Money bags typically have the extended handle straps looping underneath the bag and back up the other side to form the other handle but the straps stop just underneath the bottom on this bag. The base of the bag does have a stronger build in that it is riveted every inch instead of stitched, which is unusual.

The leather interior of the bag has a pocket to one side. The lock is stamped British Lever and although the key is missing, sliding the escutcheon ring down releases the hasp. The bag has a brass domed foot to each corner.

This bag is still very useful and the rigid, grained leather gives it a stiff shape. Early 20th Century.
