Description

A bell metal Hand Bell with an iron clanger and a very good handle.

The handle is possibly a rosewood or of that family and is very finely turned. The simplicity of the typically shaped Bell is contrasted by the quality of both the turning of the handle and the wood used to make it. The acorn finial of the handle is also bell metal and likely has a rod attached to it which extends through the centre of the handle to secure it.

The Bell has a good sound and might be useful for calling people in for dinner etc. Mid to late 19th Century.
