Description

A red leather Fire Bucket by Merryweather.

The bucket is of a standard construction with the main body formed of one piece of leather joined by copper rivets. The base, made of a separate piece is also riveted in place. The leather handle is held on iron D rings and the top edge of the bucket is reenforced with a metal strap. One of the leather loops that holds a D ring looks to be replaced.

The bucket retrains quite a lot of its red paint although it has worn in places. It has Merryweather's brass oval plate fixed to the handle. More can be read about the Merryweather's history by clicking on their name above. Late C19th.
