Description

An oversized Leather Briefcase.

The case is made out of a thick leather hide and has a utilitarian feel to it, made before the style of case really took off and became more refined. It's large size also means that it can fit much large papers and would take some laptops.

The case has a fishtail handle to the top and two short belt straps to secure it. The sides extend to fold over to offer more protection to the contents. By way of subtle decoration it has three tooled tramlines to the front and single diagonal lines to the back. The case has the feel of being made by a saddler and interesting for it. Late 19th century.
