Description

A Gladstone Bag made of grained leather with a green canvas interior.

The bag has a push button lock which would originally have had a key. There is also a leather pull tab by the lock to make it easier to open once the brass button is pushed down. The bag has five studs to the underside to raise it and so offer some protection from a wet ground.

The bag has a single interior pocket running its full length. The pocket is edged in leather which is a nice touch and not often seen. The bag has the odd scar and wear as you would expect but is still very useable today. Circa 1900.
